The MICHIGAN KID.

THIRD INSTALLMENT
SYNOPSIS—Jimmy Rowan was hopelessly in love with Rose Morris, the prettiest girl in Dover, Mich. Of course, that was years ago, in early school days. . . but it was hopeless for Jimmy because he was just "that Rowan kid," desperately poor, while Rose's family was rich. While Jimmy was working his way through college was provided by the state of the high stools; he had two men were so different in character that a clash was inevitable. Jim had made it a practice nevlose, and when your father offered shunder that a clash was inevitable. Jim had nitched himself upon one of the high stools; he had two men were so different in character that a clash was inevitable. Jim had made it a practice nevlose, and when your father offered of waiter, saying:

"Here! Give this fellow a square-made the weekly trips for mail and for the necessary purchases. One day while he was in town it began to snow and during the afternoon this snow turned into rain "Yes, of course. Aladdin's lamp,"
